Following is a list of products we use to build our homes. Not every home will have every product. For example, exterior siding may be wood or vinyl and may or may not include stone or brick, depending on plan and budget. Where possible, we have listed multiple manufacturers for some products, such as siding, plumbing fixtures, cabinets and appliances, to help you choose American made products.

WHAT DETERMINES IF A PRODUCT IS U.S. MADE?

After all, we live in a global economy and many of the systems used to build homes consist of many parts.

According to the Federal Trade Commission (FTC), there's no law that requires most products labeled "Made in USA" to have any disclosure about the amount of U.S. made content. The FTC requires disclosure of U.S. content only on automobiles and textile, wool and fur products.

A product claiming to be made in the U.S., according to the FTC, must be "all or virtually all" made in the United States or in U.S. territories and possessions, and the FTC defines "all or virtually all" as "all significant parts, processing, and labor that go into the product must be of U.S. origin. Products should not contain any – or should contain only negligible – foreign content."

It gives the following example: "A company manufactures propane barbecue grills at a plant in Nevada. The product's major components include the gas valve, burner and aluminum housing, each of which is made in the U.S. The grill's knobs and tubing are imported from Mexico. An unqualified Made in USA claim is not likely to be deceptive because the knobs and tubing make up a negligible portion of the product's total manufacturing costs and are insignificant parts of the final product."

While we can't guarantee that small parts of certain products on our list are U.S. made, they are, to the best of our knowledge, "all or virtually all" American made.
